How often have you come home from a meeting exhausted because you listened to the same points made over and over again? Robert's Rules has a solution: the previous question subsidiary motion. Although the name doesn't quite speak for itself, the previous question is a motion to end debate, allow no further discussion or subsidiary [...]

Robert's Rules and the Previous Question Motion - dummies

The "previous question" was initially used in the English Parliament in 1604. At that time, use of this motion was intended not to end debate, but to suppress the main question for the rest of the session (similar to an objection to the consideration of a question). It could be debated and when put to a vote, an affirmative vote on the previous question would put the main motion to a vote ...
